

I have always been compelled by great storytelling whether from the adventures of my grandparents to the stranger sitting next to me. There is great beauty in the strength of others to overcome and survive the weathering of life. I find that there is an importance to creating greater communication about who we are and where we come from. In my paintings I work to create complex layers that pull people in and take them on a visceral journey that explores and reflects multiple emotional layers. As an independent curator I am always looking for artists that I can collaborate with to create unique stories that explore personal existence.
